Where is the Tea Party?

By Henry Lamb

To listen click here

Democrats rarely miss an opportunity to denounce the Tea Party, and are quick to announce that the Tea Party is over. Still in shock about the effectiveness of the Tea Party in its effort to take control of the House of Representatives from Nancy Pelosi, Democrats are trying to convince themselves that the 2010 mid-term election was a fluke. They just can't believe that the Tea Party could do it again in 2012.

Where is the Tea Party? It is not "occupying" public parks and leaving mountains of trash that must be cleaned up at public expense. The Tea Party is not "occupying" California ports, disrupting the flow of commerce by forcing working people to lose days of work. The Tea Party is not shutting down restaurants and blocking streets to congregate in tent-cities where drugs, sex, and filth identify the "occupiers." The Tea Party is going about its business, organizing and learning to be even more effective in achieving its goals.

The Tea Party exists because ordinary people realized that government was out of control and Congress was unable or unwilling to fix the problem. The Tea Party exists to return the federal government to the limitations of the U.S. Constitution, to end the out-of-control deficit, and to force the government to work within a balanced budget.

Democrats consider these goals to be extreme. Democrats go ballistic when Tea Party-supported Representatives refuse to rubber-stamp Barack Hussein Obama's demand to spend money the nation doesn't

The Politics of Race

By Fred Gielow

The Republican Party was founded for the express purpose of opposing slavery.

Republicans passed the Thirteenth Amendment, granting freedom to slaves; the Fourteenth Amendment, granting citizenship to slaves; and the Fifteenth Amendment, giving them the right to vote.

The Ku Klux Klan was originally formed as a terrorist group to attack Republicans who had come to the Democrat South after the Civil War to help enforce legal equality for freed slaves.

Republicans passed the Civil Rights Act of 1866 and the Reconstruction Act of 1867.

Republicans kept introducing federal civil rights bills and Democrats kept blocking them - a bill to protect black voters in the South in 1890; anti-lynching bills in 1922, 1935, and 1938; and anti-poll tax bills in 1942, 1944, and 1946.

Nixon invented affirmative action. He worked to pass the Civil Rights Act of 1957, for which he was personally thanked by Martin Luther King. He was a card-carrying member of the NAACP in 1960. His Democratic opponent, John F. Kennedy, was not. On a statistical basis, there was more desegregation of Southern schools in Nixon's first term than in any historical period, before or since. Not only did Nixon desegregate the schools, he broke the back of the discriminatory building trades in 1968, with his "Philadelphia Plan."

In 1956, the Republican Party platform endorsed the Supreme Court's 1954 decision in Brown v. Board of Education that desegregated public schools. The Democrat platform did not, and would not, as long as Democrats were winning elections by appeals to racism.

It was Republicans who introduced, promoted, and passed every civil rights act from the end of the Civil War, right up to and including the 1964 Civil Rights Act.

President Eisenhower introduced a bill to create the U.S. Civil Rights Commission and to fix the enforcement provisions of the 1957 civil rights bill that had been gutted by Democrats. In response, Democrats staged the longest filibuster in history - more than 125 hours. The bill was eventually passed and was signed into law by Eisenhower on May 6, 1960.

Barry Goldwater was a vehement foe of segregation. He was a founder of the NAACP in Arizona, donating the equivalent of several thousand dollars to the organization's efforts to integrate the public schools.

Lyndon Johnson voted against every civil rights bill during his tenure in the Senate. But by the time he became president, he had flipped 180 degrees.

Democrats only embraced civil rights when blacks were voting in high enough numbers to affect election outcomes. Then, with unimaginable chutzpah, they actually claimed credit for everything their party had ferociously blocked for the prior century!

So how did Democrats pull off such high deception and trickery? Lyndon Johnson did it. With massive handouts to blacks, thanks to his "Great Society" program (which cost taxpayers hundreds of billions of dollars), Johnson in effect bought the black vote. He demonstrated that an entire race can be bribed to vote for Democrats.

His support of civil rights legislation in 1964 wasn't to help blacks; it was only to help Democrats. He himself admitted, "I'll have them n****rs voting Democratic for the next two hundred years."

Now, more than 50 years have slipped by since the Civil Rights Act of 1957, and the great political hoodwinking continues. Johnson's politics continue to demonstrate that those who give you freedom are forgotten when there are others who will give you money.

Is that what's going on today?

have - in order to reward his supporters in the green-energy industry, or to expand largesse to the democrat-voting, dependent segment of society who believes government owes them a living.

The Tea Party is maturing, evolving, coalescing with 9.12 groups and existing property rights, and tax-reform groups. The Tea Party is growing into a genuine Freedom Movement. Instead of "occupying" public space, Tea Parties, and the organizations with which they are coalescing, are holding weekly and monthly meetings to study issues at the local, state, and national levels.

They are learning about sustainable development, and Agenda 21. They are learning how the 17th Amendment removed the states from participation in the national government. They are learning why and how to repeal this amendment. They are learning how domestic policy is influenced by Global Governance. They are working with other organizations to learn how to influence state legislation. And they are holding conferences and seminars everywhere.

Like an ostrich with its head in the sand, the Democrat Party can refuse to see the Tea Party at work. They claim that the Tea Party is fading or that it has fallen out of favor with the public. Democrats can make whatever claims about the Tea party they wish. When Democrats pretend that the Tea Party is no longer a force to be dealt with, they do so at their own peril.

Across the country, people are waking to the reality that if freedom is to be preserved for future generations, this generation must go to work. When Woodrow Wilson was elected in 1912, the nation turned left, philosophically. For nearly a century, Progressives who embrace a Marxist philosophy have been gaining political power. They deliberately focused on public education, and on labor. Most importantly, they focused on government. Woodrow Wilson created the League of Nations, but the U.S. Senate would not let a world government steal America's national sovereignty.

Franklin D. Roosevelt, a Democrat, created the United Nations; The U.S. Senate – under Democratic control – swallowed the philosophy hook, line, and sinker. Immediately, the United Nations Education, Scientific, and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) was created to begin the transformation of public education. It has taken a half century, but now, programs such as the International Baccalaureate partner with more than 3000 schools in 141 countries. Programs such as this denigrate the principles of freedom set forth in the U.S. Constitution and promote an “Administrative” form of global governance and world community.

In the past, the people who now populate the Tea Party and The Freedom Movement assumed the media was correct when warnings were dismissed as conspiracy theories and the ranting of kooks. Now, however, the people who populate the Tea Party and The Freedom Movement are learning the truth – for themselves – and they are engaged in the process to save the U.S. Constitution, preserve freedom, and pass it intact to the next generation.

The election in 2012 will determine whether The Freedom Movement is successful. If Barack Hussein Obama is re-elected, along with a Congressional majority of Democrats, it is too late. The United States of America will no longer be the land of the free. Instead, it will continue to become an administrative unit of the United Nations. It will continue to by-pass elected officials at every level of government, while transforming states into administrative units of the national government, which, through regional consolidation and forced comprehensive land use planning, transform local governments into administrative units of the states.

If Barack Hussein Obama, and his Marxist Democrat admirers are kicked out of Washington, and both the Executive branch and the Congress are populated with Tea Party people who believe in limited government, balanced budgets, private property rights, and individual freedom – then the next generation will be O.K. and free to continue the fight against Marxism.

Where is the Tea Party? Expect to see them on Election Day, 2012.

The Freedom Movement

The 2010 mid-term elections, which gave Republicans the majority in the House of Representatives, was just the first tremor in what could be a nationwide eruption of freedom. The Tea Party and Glenn Beck's 9.12 groups are generally identified as the power that put Republicans in Congress – and into countless state and local offices.

These new groups now number into the thousands, in communities in every state. For the most part, these groups include Republicans, Democrats, Libertarians, and Independents. What binds them together is the belief that the U.S. Constitution must be restored as the foundation of law, that the Constitution limits the power and reach of the federal government, that the government must operate within a balanced budget, and that the deficit must be eliminated.

These new groups join thousands of organizations that have been working for years to defend the Constitution and resist Progressive policies in government. The number of these groups, and the potential political power they represent, is truly a national movement toward freedom.

The Freedom Movement can wield more political power than the Green Movement of the 1970s. Thousands of “green” organizations literally changed the course of history by influencing the adoption of policies that restricted freedom in the name of protecting the environment. Science has now disproved many of the exaggerated claims of the green organizations, and the “green” movement has lost much of its political power. What once was a powerful movement is rapidly being replaced by the expanding power of The Freedom Movement.

We are working on plans to identify and promote the participating organizations in The Freedom Movement. Moreover, we are developing a program to identify the individuals within these organizations as participants of The Freedom Movement. Stay tuned. We'll keep you posted on our progress.
